DESCRIPTION

Constructed c.1893, the Campbell House is a two-story ell-shaped frame house which possesses all the details of the popular Eastlake tradition. The two wings of the ell have beveled corners which are sheltered at the cornice line by overhanging gables supported by scrollwork wood brackets. Tall double-hung windows are centered on all facades at both levels. Paired brackets give lovely rhythm to the roof overhang. A one-story shed-roof entry porch is supported by turned columns. The roof is ornamented at its cornice line by spindlework. Prime gables have ornaments of spindle and scrollwork. Bay windows with stained glass panels mark the east and south facade.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Criterion: CArea of significance: Architecture

There is no better example of Eastlake residential design in Benton County than the Campbell House. There is little evidence of modification except modest additions at the rear. The house is a notable representation of the housing taste of an affluent Rogers merchant in the late nineteenth century.
