Description

The Vinie McCall House is a one-and-a-half story, wood-frame residence constructed c. 1895 in the Plain Traditional style. Stone piers support the frame walls, which are covered with white-painted, lapped weatherboard. The ell-shaped house is covered by a composition-shingled gable roof with a large, central cross gable on the front elevation. There is one central interior brick chimney.

A pleasing form is created on the front, or western, elevation by the substantial one-story hipped-roof porch, which emanates from the sill of the paired one-over-one attic windows in the cross gable. This porch is supported by five turned columns, three across the front, and is adorned by a delicate turned-spindle frieze. Underneath, the current porch floor is poured concrete. The building plan incorporates the dual entrance, or "duple" form that is commonly found in rural and small town housing in Arkansas. The single-leaf wood doors contain a three-pane upper light and are symmetrically positioned. Otherwise, the front elevation is fenestrated by two one-over-one double-hung windows (currently, an aftermarket muntin has been glued over the panes to somewhat give the impression of a six-over-six sash configuration), which flank the central porch.

The northern elevation consists of a single one-over-one double-hung window placed in the center of the first story, and a pair of identical windows in the gable end. A later, drop-sided, shed-roof addition extends to the north from the rear ell.

The rear, or eastern, elevation is comprised of two one-over-one double-hung windows on each floor and an inset porch on both elevation of the rear ell at the southeast corner. This ell was later enclosed by ten six-over-six double-hung windows over a short wall sheathed with false-bevel novelty siding.

A pair of six-over-six double-hung windows illuminate the first-story of the southern elevation, while a somewhat smaller pair of one-over-one double-hung windows fenestrate the upper story.

The interior was not viewed.

Located on Spring Street in Marshall, the Vinie McCall House is in good condition.

Significance

Other than that it was the home of Vinie McCall, nothing is currently known about the history of this residence. Despite this lack of historical documentation, the Vinie McCall House is a fine representative of Marshall's diverse architectural record and an exemplary example of its building type - a gable-roofed, ell-shaped Plain Traditional residence with dual front entrances. This building is locally significant under Criterion C, however, because it reflects the local builder's attempt to achieve a more pleasing visual aesthetic from this basic form by employing a front-facing cross gable and a Folk Victorian porch.
