Description

The stone barn at the Hoofman Farmstead is a one-and-one-half story, gable roof, stone barn building which served as a root and fruit cellar. A shed roof rear stone addition has been attached to the western or rear elevation of the barn, resulting in a "saltbox" plan. One interior brick chimney rises through the ridge just to the south of center. The first story walls are constructed of stone and are at least one-and-one-half feet thick. The upper story is constructed of wood and sheathed in vertical boards. The southern gable end and the shed addition to the west are both accessed by single-leaf doors set into the wall beneath crude brick arches, laid as headers in a curve over the opening. The small, almost square windows on the eastern, western and northern elevations receive the same treatment. The building is covered with a metal roof and set upon a continuous stone foundation.

Significance

The stone root and fruit cellar at the Hoofman Farmstead is the largest historic stone outbuilding in White County and one of the oldest. Its stone walls are almost completely intact, as are many of the original doors and windows. It is remarkable for the vernacular if somewhat awkward attempts at detail, such as the brick headers arranged in an arch above the openings, and the elegance of even its later rear shed addition, which complements the vernacular stonework of the original construction. It is the finest example of a stone outbuilding in White County.

Verbal Boundary Description:

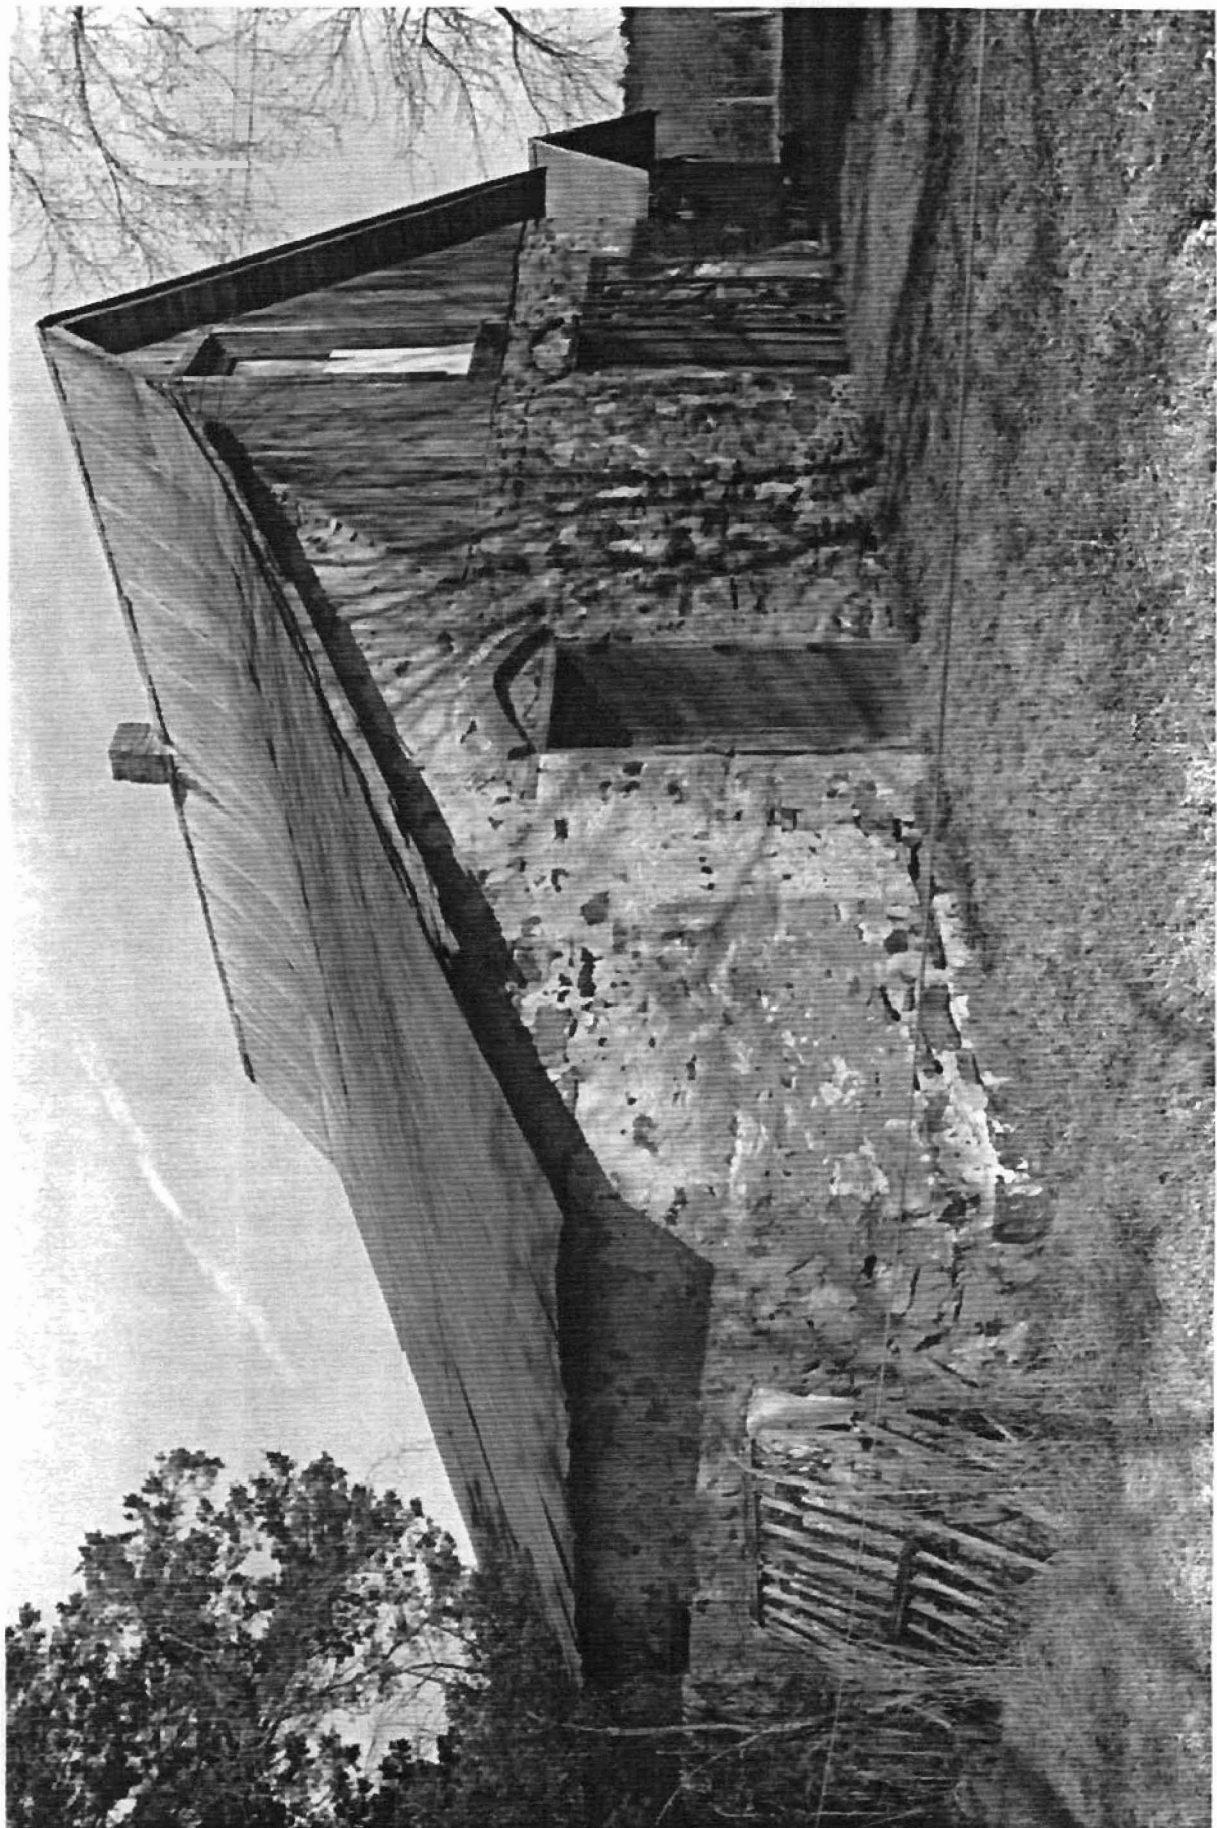

Beginning at the point formed by the intersection of the southern edge of the Hoofman Farmstead driveway with a perpendicular line running parallel to the eastern elevation of the Hoofman Farmstead barn and located 50 feet to the east thereof (a point located approximately 685 feet to the west of County Road 77), proceed southerly along said line for a distance of approximately 200 feet to the point formed by its intersection with a perpendicular line running parallel to the southern elevation of the barn; thence proceed westerly along said line for a distance of approximately 200 feet to a point formed by its intersection with a perpendicular line running parallel to the western elevation of the barn; thence proceed northerly for a distance of approximately 200 feet along said line to a point formed by its intersection with a perpendicular line running along the southern edge of the driveway; thence proceed easterly for a distance of approximately 200 feet along said line to the point of beginning.

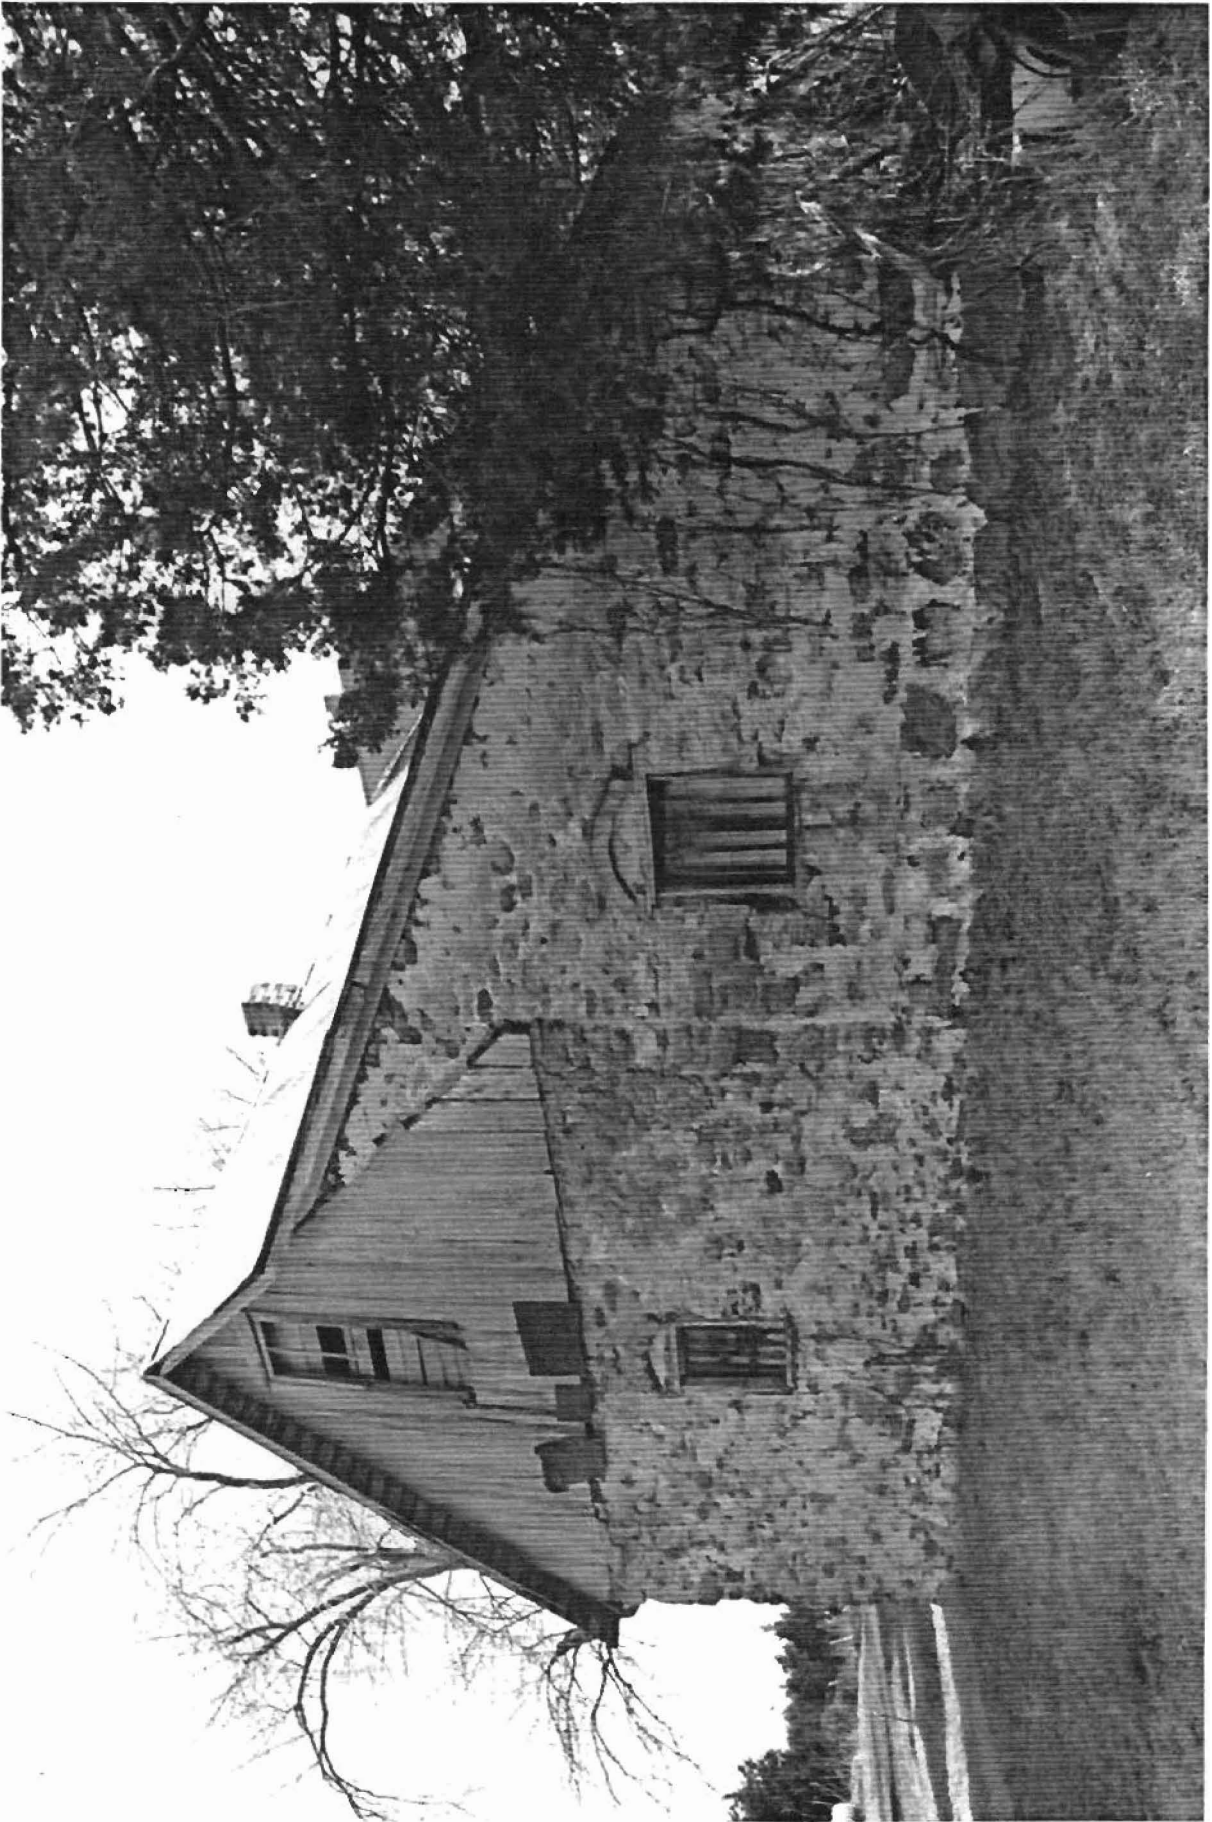

Boundary Justification:

This resource was construed as part of a larger farmstead that has lost its integrity as such; thus, this boundary includes all the property known to be historically associated with this resource.
